

SAYS WHITE MEN RUIN ALASKANS

U. S. Official Arraigns Conditions in Report to President and Redfield.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 20.—The white man's lack of regard for the property of the natives is the crime of Alaska, according to a report submitted Tuesday to President Wilson and Secretary Redfield by Dr. R. Lester Jones, deputy commissioner of fisheries. The report astoundingly arraigns conditions in Alaska.

"In many sections the wife and daughters are dishonored and any resistance from the husband, father or brother is overcome by threats and bribes and liquor, until even the men have all their best impulses and senses deadened and seem to be untrained."

Saloon follows white men. "Where the white man has settled, the saloon prevails and that has had more to do with the ruin of the Indian and the Aleut than all other causes."

In sections where the saloon is not found liquor reaches the natives in the form of pay and bribes.

In one instance, the report says, a commissioner, a deputy marshal and deputy clerk of a court were actually interested in a saloon and did everything in their power to see that their private interests were not molested and that their company was not molested after it had been found violating the law."

The wholesale killing of fur-bearing animals by those who spend their time trapping and hunting, killing everything and anything at any time of the year, the commissioner declares, has been conducted in some sections until it is now necessary to reach back into unexplored regions in order to keep up the supply of furs.

Natives demoralized. "There is a generally demoralized and had atmosphere among the natives," concludes the report. "It was told me by one of those who had been entrusted with care of the natives that some and indecent language as it is for us to talk about the weather. This is the keynote of the whole situation."

"It was the duty of the government employees who have been sent there in the past to protect these people, and it was expected that their example would improve their minds instead of demoralizing them. In other words, the natives of the islands would be exactly the atmosphere created by the talk and actions of the United States employees."

WORK ON EAST SIDE CANAL IN UPPER VALLEY IS STARTED. A sufficient number of contracts for right of way for the east side canal in the upper valley have been returned from Washington for the reclamation service to begin work on the construction of the ditch.

A gang of 100 men, together with the head of horses and mules, have established a camp near the east side canal near the dam and have begun work. Monday steam was up in the big excavator on the west side canal and the excavator on the east side canal will soon be set to work.

The contract calls for the completion of both of the ditches by July 1.

The Story of a Young Girl's Struggles

The Fortunes of Fanny

Fanny Tells Crandall She Never Wants to See Him Again.

BY VIRGINIA TERRELL VAN DE WATER

Tuesday morning after Christmas was gray and raw. It was too cold to snow, people said, yet every few minutes a few flakes would whirl down from the sky.

The east wind blew steadily from the river, whistling and piping about the plate glass windows and doors of the Cairo barber shop.

It was the noon hour, and Fanny felt too chilly to care to go out to luncheon. Her bones and head ached. She wandered if she had caught cold.

or if she was not yet rested from the celebration of Saturday. Yesterday she had been so tired that she had spent much of her time in bed.

She did not know that she was still feeling the effects of the hours of strain and misery she had gone through.

At noon time the shop was almost deserted, as was often the case at this hour. Two men were in the rear of the room, but until Angelo returned from his race around to his home on Third avenue for a bite, the girl had the front of the shop to herself.

In one instance, the report says, a commissioner, a deputy marshal and deputy clerk of a court were actually interested in a saloon and did everything in their power to see that their private interests were not molested and that their company was not molested after it had been found violating the law."

The wholesale killing of fur-bearing animals by those who spend their time trapping and hunting, killing everything and anything at any time of the year, the commissioner declares, has been conducted in some sections until it is now necessary to reach back into unexplored regions in order to keep up the supply of furs.

afternoon. All the light seemed to have gone from her eyes, and men were not tempted to linger to compliment her.

When Crandall met her at the corner he took her by the arm and led her away from the crowded thoroughfare and brilliant electric lights to a quiet cross street.

"Why would you go out with me tomorrow night?" he demanded as soon as they were where they could talk without being overheard.

His face and drew her hand through his arm, but she withdrew it. She felt weak and shaky. If she was going to speak at all she must do so at once, or her courage would fall.

"Because, Mr. Crandall," she said, her voice unsteady, "you are a married man."

She listened in agony for his reply. There was not the indignant denial she longed to hear.

"Yes," he was with a roughness that surprised her.

"And if I am married—whose business is it?" And who told you I was married? Do you believe everybody who tattles to you?"

"I saw your wife—with you yesterday. I heard somebody call her by your name," Fanny accused.

"Then you found it out for yourself, did you?" he said. "But you in better hurry, anyway. But now that you do know it, whose business is it? Haven't I a right to a wife, if—"

Fanny looked at him wide-eyed. "It is none of my business," she replied, "except when you ask me to go somewhere with you. Then it is my business."

Tells Him She Trusted Him. "She wonders at her own temerity. 'To you mean,' she asked, 'that you never guessed I was married? In the name of heaven, what difference does it make to you? It doesn't hurt you—does it?'"

"It certainly does hurt me," she flashed forth. "You would not hurt a married man. I'm a decent girl, Mr. Crandall."

He laughed coarsely and angrily. "Yet you were good enough when I made you presents?" he taunted.

"What did you suppose I was spending money on you for?" she asked. "I was a little fool that you thought if I was a single man I would marry you? Well, I wouldn't! See? But if you'll behave yourself and be sensible—his manner changing and his voice softening—"I'll give you many good times. Understand? Now, will you go to dinner and the theater with me tomorrow night?"

All the traditions of her decent Irish ancestry sprang to arms at the insult. "No, I won't!" she exclaimed. "I trusted you! You know I trusted you!"

"And accepted my gift!" he sneered. "Look here," grasping her by the arm, "don't be a fool. Remember your bread and butter, child. You'd best keep on good terms with me."

"I'll stand by you," she exclaimed. "I'll stand by you," she exclaimed. "I'll stand by you," she exclaimed.

Ninety-Nine Former City Employees Have Money Due Them Which Is Unclaimed

It is generally believed that every man who gets a job with any government, whether city, county, state or national, does so with the chief end in view of drawing down the salary, whether or not he does anything to earn it. With that idea in mind it is hard to believe that any man would quit a government job without first collecting all that was coming to him.

In the El Paso city, built, however, may be found a list of 99 former employees of the city to whom are due sums ranging from 10 cents to $100 or more, according to the official accounting.

Which is carried as a "trust" fund. Judging from the names, most of those who failed to get their salaries to the last cent, are Mexicans, though there are a number of names which would indicate that their owners were Americans.

One Plausman would seem to mark his owner as being at least of Irish extraction.

This particular trust fund is a good deal of a nuisance to the bookkeepers and accountants as it must be kept as religiously as would another account in which the balance is to be paid out as valuable to the city as a 50 cent bank balance is to one of the big banks and involves just about as much labor to keep track of it.

Most of the little balances are due common laborers who left their employment under one form or another, and never bothered to go back to the pay wagon to get their warrant for the small amounts due them.

It can be had at any time upon presentation of proper proof and it is that feature of it which makes necessary the careful bookkeeping in connection with the account.

Annette Kellerman Has Something on the "High
Jinks" Chorus Queens

Millwaukee, Wis., Jan. 20.—Grand avenue could not have passed the national board of censorship early today.

Practically the entire film would have been deleted from the time the fire alarm was turned in at the Schlicht hotel until the last shivering chorus girl had been convinced it was safe to venture back after more clothes.

Sixty men and women fled into the street when fire was discovered in the basement. Most of the women were bare of the "High Jinks" musical comedy company.

A big crowd gathered, but it didn't watch the scene. Several persons were carried out by firemen. Crippen Armstrong, electrician for the theatrical company, and Morris Waring, a New York salesman, threw ropes out at the fourth floor windows and slid to the ground.
